

The Mahāvadānasūtra*

A Reconstruction of Chapter IV & V

by

Takamichi Fukita

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS

Almost three decades have passed since Dr. E. Waldschmidt published his Das Mahāvadānasūtra.** His publications of a number of Buddhist Āgamas found in Central Asia are excellent examples of precise textcritical research works. Das Mahāvadānasūtra is also one of the important parts in this series. We owe a great deal to his work which tried to portray the Mahāvadānasūtra in its natural and full form by attentive reading of fragmentary manuscripts leading to a reconstruction of it based on the Pāli and Chinese versions.

Philological work has, however, improved and changed considerably during these thirty years after the publication of Dr. Waldschmidt's

* The title of this sūtra is not beyond doubt because the colophon was lost. Dr. E. Waldschmidt discovered this name based on the Pāli Mahāpadānasuttanta. Cf. E. Waldschmidt, Das Mahāvadānasūtra, Teil I, Berlin 1953, S.3. In the Abhidharmakośopāyikā of Śamathadeva, we find the name of this sūtra: rtogs pa brjod pa chen po'i mdo, P. vol.118, p.259,1,8. Cf. Y. Honjo, A Table of Āgama-Citations in the Abhidharmakośa and the Abhidharmakośopāyikā, Part I, Kyoto 1984, p.105.

** Ernst Waldschmidt, Das Mahāvadānasūtra: Ein kanonischer Text über die sieben letzten Buddhas. Sanskrit, verglichen mit dem Pāli. Nebst einer Analyse der in chinesischer Übersetzung überlieferten Parallelversionen. Auf Grund von Turfan-Handschriften herausgegeben. Teil I-II. Berlin 1953, 1956 (ADAW 1952 Nr.8, 1954 Nr.8).

work. In that time, new sources for philological work of the Mahāvādānasūtra have been presented to the academic world. Dr. Waldschmidt himself identified another group of Central Asian fragments as the Dīrghāgama, including the Mahāvādānasūtra.

These fragments are the paper-manuscripts (Cat.-No.685), to be found in the first volume of Sanskrihandschriften aus den Turfanfunden.* They are written in “Northern Turkestan Brāhmī, Type a”, whose characters may be traced to the seventh or eighth century A.D. Folios 94–119 of this manuscript which had been identified as the Mahāvādānasūtra are not considered in Dr. Waldschmidt’s Das Mahāvādānasūtra, but they are available in the second volume of Sanskrihandschriften aus den Turfanfunden. As a result, the latter work lends itself to convenient philological research, because the reader can compare both romanization and facsimile.

Besides this publication of Dr. Waldschmidt, in 1977, Dr. R. Gnoli published The Gilgit Manuscript of the Saṅghabhedavastu.<sup>**</sup> In his general introduction, he outlined the significant characteristics of this text,<sup>***</sup> commenting that the second part of the Saṅghabhedavastu can be “traced” in the Mahāvādānasūtra. It seems that this point is not sufficiently taken into consideration by today’s scholars. In fact, the Mahāvādānasūtra and the Saṅghabhedavastu do have an actual correspondence in certain particular chapters. Although Dr. Waldschmidt used a Tibetan version of the Vinaya in his textcritical works, Das Mahāparinirvāṇasūtra and Das Catuṣpariṣatsūtra, he did not use it for Das Mahāvādānasūtra.

Reviewed in O. von Hinüber, “Die Erforschung der Gilgit-Handschriften,” Nachrichten der Akademie der Wissenschaften in Göttingen Philologisch-Historische Klasse, No. 12 (April 1979), SS. 29–33.

Referring to the above suggestion of Dr. Gnoli, the following paper tries to reconstruct chapter IV and V of the Mahāvādānasūtra. Using the Saṅghabhedavastu as a basis of comparison throughout, I have attempted this restoration by reconsidering all previous manuscripts as well as adding one new source (Cat.-No.685). Within the limitations of the facsimiles that have been published, I have reviewed all of Dr. Waldschmidt’s readings and with reference to his work produced a new romanized text. Dr. Waldschmidt’s readings are generally reliable, but there are some that needed to be corrected. The format used is such that the upper text is my reconstruction based in general on the most complete manuscript: Cat.-No.399; below are listed romanized readings from all fragments (including No.399) containing the same passages. The numbers refer to Dr. Waldschmidt’s listing of these same texts, and are provided to facilitate comparison with his publications. All of the fragments used are listed at the end of the paper.

1) Here W.'s reading is quoted, because the facsimile has not been published. But I have doubts about W.'s rendering which is inconsistent with the number of missing akṣaras in the corresponding line on the opposite side of the same folio (82.3). It is unclear why W. does not give the exact number of missing akṣaras in this lacuna. Following his footnote (MAV I, S.42, footnote 8), there should be about 30 akṣaras between khal[u]/// and ///[ta]ḥ, when in fact the corresponding line is lacking only 5 akṣaras.
